

ABSTRACT

A program may be partitioned into at least two stages, where at least one of the stages comprises more than one parallel thread. Data required by each of the stages, which data is defined in a previous stage may be identified. Transmission of the required data between consecutive stages may then be provided for.